Arizona golf. In Chicago. In January.

It is the second week of January in Chicago. The wind off the lake is measured in negative numbers, the public courses have been shut since November, and the range mats are under a foot of snow. You pull into a 100-acre property just west of the city, walk through a clubhouse held at a steady seventy degrees — and step out onto a Scottsdale desert.

Palm trees. Undulating fairways. Real sand bunkers and real water hazards under the warm glow of a stadium-lit sky. This is MEGALODOME GOLF — billed as the world's first fully playable indoor golf course — and it is coming to Oswego in the fall of 2027.

For decades, the golfer in a cold-weather city has lived with the same bargain: five good months, then a long winter of screens and net-backed mats. MEGALODOME GOLF sets out to end that bargain. Here you actually play — a nine-hole, par-30 executive course of six par-3s and three par-4s, designed by Huxham Golf Design of Montreal, across three interconnected domes, with a fourth dome devoted entirely to practice.

A round takes about ninety minutes — not five hours — and the doors are open from six in the morning to one a.m., every single day of the year.

The look is pure Southwest. Four interconnected climate-controlled domes, each roughly 270,000 square feet and 110 feet tall, hold real sand bunkers, real water hazards and four kinds of first-quality artificial turf beneath a stadium-lit desert sky. The sand and the water are real; everything that grows is engineered.

A two-story clubhouse ties it together — a sports bar and lounge with 900-foot views down the course, a fully stocked pro shop, and event space built for outings and leagues. Founding memberships are forming now, ahead of the fall 2027 opening.

“While the snow falls outside, you’re playing in a perfect seventy-two degrees — three hundred sixty-five days a year.”

REAL GOLF — NOT A SCREEN

What separates MEGALODOME GOLF from screen-golf and entertainment venues is simple: it is a real course. Four kinds of first-quality artificial turf are laid across the fairways, tee surrounds, greens and rough; the bunkers hold real sand and the hazards hold real water. You shape real shots, read true-rolling greens and walk a real routing — strategy and all.

FOUR DOMES, ONE DESTINATION

Each dome rises roughly 110 feet and spans some 270,000 square feet — engineered for full-swing height and built to stand up to a Midwestern winter. The practice dome offers a 275-yard hitting bay, longer than most outdoor ranges in the country, with fifty stalls and technology, a short-game area, and putting greens. A two-story clubhouse anchors it all — a sports bar and lounge with 900-foot views down the course on one side and the range on the other, a fully stocked pro shop, and event space for outings and leagues.

BUILT FOR EVERY GOLFER

The facility is designed for the whole community of the game — recreational players and single-digit handicaps, junior and collegiate programs, corporate outings, leagues, lessons, and clinics. It is, at last, a place where a Chicago golfer can keep a game sharp in the middle of February.
